a nap

is the name
of a little
alien
i once knew
and now i
never see it anymore.
sometimes it
slivers into the room
secretly,
watching me cook,
play with my youngest,
cutting the grass,
toiling about the studio,
throwing a shirt in the dryer
or cleaning a bit
around the toilet
and when it
is a bit loud,
i flop my head in it's direction
to see the slithering silhouette gone.
i used to spend a lot of
time with my alien nap pal,
and now i have forgotten
what his
green countenance looks like.
hope he has
enough gas to
UFO back to his
sleep filled universe.

healing

at times,
my wife's response to
my kid's injury is,
'why didn't you prevent that?'
as i put the superhero mask over my brain folds,
i wonder how many band aids,
doctor bills,
crutches,
tubes of neosporin
and bottles of peroxide
could be saved in those heroic pursuits
to save these kids from the harm.
then,
the mask comes off
and i realize in our
mere mortality
we are to be
harmed to realize
how good it can feel to just sit in random harmony in the blue enveloped world
with a popsicle in hand on a cool summer day at 4 p.m.
free of injury, yet knowing the world is a dangerous fucking place that can happen at any moment as the superhero parents of now are just as powerless
as the superhero kids
of yesterday.

if i was a camera

and was owned by
a guy like me,
i would be in a pocket
quite a bit,
within view most of the time,
getting handled,
poked
and fondled all time
as i looked at strangers,
watched dogs,
snapped at cats,
ogled at the kids,
snuck to see his wife,
watched the sky,
looked into the moon
and had constant contact with the world.
and the only time of
rest would be night,
but that could be shattered
when the pounding
crash of storm comes down and the night eye would have to strain to
find some
